If you elect to audition for Piccolo, you must sign-up for a separate audition slot. The judges will consider both the Flute and Piccolo auditions when assigning this spot.

CAUCASIAN SKETCHES

No. 4: Procession of the Sardar

MIKHAIL IPPOLITOV-IVANOV, Op. 10
(1859-1935)

This should be played in a march-like tempo, but not too fast. Piccolo and Bassoon play in unison, so tuning is very important. Play in four-bar phrases, and observe dynamics carefully. Make a good crescendo on the F# half-note 4 measures after A. Play the measure before B as mf; not f. This can best be accomplished using this fingering for high G#: 6:666.

The score is marked 3=72, but it generally is played at 3=92 or faster.

One beat before B, the internal slur is really a triplet brace and doesn’t imply a separate tonguing.

EIGHT RUSSIAN FOLK SONGS

No. 7: Round Dance

ANATOLI LIADOV
(1855-1914)
Piccolo players will probably play this excerpt more than any other one. This passage, the so-called Trio of the march, must be memorized since you are often asked to stand while playing it or even to play in front of the ensemble. Since more than one Piccolo usually plays this “solo,” intonation can be a problem.

I suggest putting a short trill on the D♭ eleven measures before the 1st ending, and also on all the other lower quarter notes in the 3 measures before the long D-E trill towards the end. I like two grace notes (C♯ and D) leading to the high G on both first and second endings.

In 1897, Sousa composed this march for band one half-step higher, and for orchestra in the present key. Because D♭ Piccolos were in common use, the original band part was in this comfortable key of G Major, for D♭ Piccolo. Now that Piccolos are only made in C, the excerpt must be played a half-step higher (in A♭) when performed in band.

The excerpt is shown at this small “marching folio” size because many editions are printed this way.
